

New York

Interior Designer: Carolina von Humboldt

Entering this New York apartment is an incredible experience. Although immersed in Manhattan's hustle and bustle, we are instantly enshrouded in an almost suspended dimension, an aura attained by the masterful spatial distribution, the use of volumes and proportions, and above all, the décor itself. This peaceful sanctuary is the residence of interior decorator Carolina von Humboldt, who designed the project, picked all materials and colors, supervised the renovation, and designed some of the furniture. A tribute to her love for homes, this personal project makes the multifaceted nuances of her personality visible at the very first glance.

A true oasis of tranquility, this dwelling is also made for entertaining, as attested by the utterly unstructured living room, dotted with many different chairs for more dynamic and pleasant socializing. The gorgeous terrace, a rarity in New York. Although elegant and curated in every detail, the dining area has a casual feel to it. Carolina places two office desks in plain sight, which is both confusing and amusing. The room almost resembles a professional studio, except for playful color combinations, such as the red stripes in the curtains matching the desk decorations, reiterating the sense of disrupted formality.

The master bedroom, sun-drenched and decorated in light gray tones with mustard yellow accents, is isolated from the rest of the apartment on the upper floor, a haven of intimacy and silence.

Carolina enjoys her home, and we have further proof of it as we encounter the terrace. Having discovered a talent for gardening, she personally takes care of her plants, relaxing in a hobby that puts her in touch with nature. For the exteriors, she exclusively chose white hydrangeas, reflecting her simple elegance and supporting the cohesiveness of every little detail, achieving an exceptional tonal effect.

